Farm Board and Chamber of Commerce of U. S. in Open Warfare

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WARFARE between the federal farm board and business as represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States reached its climax at the annual meeting of the chamber in Washington, D. C., last night. By bitter criticism of the board's policies, Alexander Leitch, the chamber's secretary, said that the board was a "bureaucratic machine." As a member of the board he uttered a challenge to match any other member "dollar for dollar." In financing a permanent nonprofit making organization to work for farm betterment, a challenge that was later accepted by Julius B. Barnes, chairman of the board of the chamber and who directed under Herbert Hoover during the war.

Mr. Leitch indulged freely in sarcasm in his address. "I am sure that most of you will agree that you know more about the agricultural situation and how to meet it than I do," he said. "A considerable percentage of your membership have made that quite clear, and perhaps the best answer I can make to the statement that if this is true, and you really know so much about it, the statement presents a very severe indictment of the organization which, having full information of the facts, has made so little effort to remedy the situation."

"When it became apparent that a means had been provided that really would help the farmer get organized co-operatively so that he, like other producers, would have some voice in determining the sale price of his commodity, the effort was branded as government price fixing, putting the government in business, etc."

"I do not recall in years gone by of hearing you business men making any such complaint against government aid that was extended to the manufacturing industry, to transportation, and to finance."

David A. Millett, an investment banker and stock man of Denver, made the chief speech in criticism of the policies of the farm board as far as the law of the land is concerned. He said that the board was "a government agency which is not a government agency, but which is a government agency."

"I repeat the agricultural market is not a market, it is a government agency," he said. "I repeat the agricultural market is not a market, it is a government agency."

"I repeat the agricultural market is not a market, it is a government agency," he said. "I repeat the agricultural market is not a market, it is a government agency."

DANCING KEEPS OFF OLD AGE, DAME SAYS

Octogenarian Teaches Others Youthful Steps

MILL Valley, Calif.—For more than three-quarters of a century Mrs. Harriet Foreman Erickson has danced—danced the years away, danced old age away.

For more than half a century she has been teaching others to dance—dance and stay young.

Today, at eighty, Mrs. Erickson is still dancing every day, teaching others to dance, including her two great-grandchildren.

She is still youthful, graceful as a wisp of reeds—smoke—and happy.

Still Ambitious.

For the soldiers of America in three wars, the Civil, Spanish and World wars, Mrs. Erickson has danced gratis.

It is her one ambition now to dance once again, for the last time in public, before what remains of the Civil war veterans, for the Spanish-American war veterans and for the American Legion, all together.

She is a sweet and gracious old lady, this octogenarian, who still teaches the dance to young and old in her Mill Valley studio. She has classes every day and is assisted by her daughter, who was known to the stage as "Clara, the Dancer," and by her granddaughter, known as "Dorothy." Her two great-grandchildren, Harvey and Helen Jean, are her regular pupils.

And let it be thought that Mrs. Erickson is a simple old lady, she is not. She is a dancer, a teacher, a social worker, a community leader.

She is a dancer, a teacher, a social worker, a community leader.
